THE NOVEMBER TIDE

The remarkable contrast between the result of the elections just held and those of November one year ago, conclusively establishes the fact that the reverses suffered by the Republican party last fall were not attributable to a restoration of public confidence in the misnamed Democracy of our politics. Careful observers saw this at the time and the Republicans hastened to profit by the warning, while the Democratic leaders were intoxicated by their temporary advantage and plunged into the very excesses which had been prophesied as the inevitable consequence of a revival of their hopes. The elections of this year have given them another severe check and to-day the party of reaction stands before the country not only defeated in nearly every contest, but shorn of all the benefit of former false-pretences, by the boldness with which the most vicious doctrines have been avowed during the campaign. The popular verdict of 1875 has been overwhelmingly with the Republican party, as the only organization which can be trusted to maintain the national faith and it only needs that our representative men rightly interpret and continue to emulate the spirit of our recent triumphs to positively assure a sweeping Republican victory in the next Presidential campaign.

If any Democratic journalist thinks he can extract any political comfort from the popular expressions this year, we have no desire to interfere with the melancholy amusement. The Arithmetic Man of the N. Y. World would need be a second Mark Tapley to find anything jolly from a Democratic point of view in the recent returns or in the present political outlook. We know he is desperately wielding his pencil but the figures are stubborn and cannot be made to foot up pleasantly for him. Just now he is trying to make a little boy enter Bigelow's election, but the disappearance of three-quarters of Tilden's 47,000 majority of last year, the disastrous rout of the Tammany and Brooklyn Rings and the decisive victory of the Republicans in the contest for the Legislature which was the principal object of the struggle in which the chief effort was to be concentrated, rather sickly and unimpressive. How much the result in the Empire state, astonished and disappointed the Democratic leaders may be inferred from the confident tone of the Democratic press in the West only a few days before the vote.

Now the facts are: 1. That every competent politician of either party in this city who's information is accessible, and by the latest returns pretty well collected and ordered, knows perfectly well that the opposition to Tammany was never so weak, distracted and disorganized as now, and that very fraudulent nominees on the ticket is about only certain to be elected. 2. That the Democratic state ticket is equally certain to be elected by an increased majority over the 50,000 majority of last year and that John Bigelow who has been the chief object of attack, will lead the Democratic majorities.

With the Tammany nominees buried under 2,500 to 30,000 majorities, while Kelly & Co. will be glad of more than 50,000 majority, and with the Democratic state ticket carried by a majority of less than 10,000, the Democratic press will have little occasion for exultation. Indeed, that he elected in all the Herald can find little occasion for it plus heir Lines and most unbridled feels in a perfect subdued manner.

The Pennsylvania Democracy have fared still worse going down in defeat with the Tammany mill stone about their neck, while even New Jersey wheels into Republican line with her Legislature and Massachusetts takes her position for the Centennial campaign. Then the West sends greeting with a rousing majority in Minnesota, a Republican triumph in Wisconsin and heavily increased Republican gains in Kansas. The Democratic success in the Mississippi election is unimportant and by the most shameful frauds in March and only serve to render more conspicuous the Republican support who ever the people's rights and free expression of the details of the ruffianism and outrage in those two States will only serve to arouse the people elsewhere to more strenuous opposition to the party which seeks power by such means.

The record of November has been a glorious one for our party and it shows that by so acting as to deserve success our triumph in the country next year will be placed beyond a doubt.

The N. Y. Times hits off the unhappy condition of the Springfield Republican, as follows:

The celebrated samuel Bowles of Springfield takes the general and humiliating defeat of his Democratic friends very much to heart. He seems to be in about the same state of mind as he was when he ran into a back room at Cincinnati after Reed had on hired him and killed a large pitcher with his brandy tears. The occasion he says upon which the Democratic eye — the eye of Samuel Bowles Esq — rests, in this dreary expanse is Mississippi. Indeed it is very hard. The fall of Kelley and Tammany specially wrings his manly bosom. The result in New York remarks samuel, is unexpected and unfortunate, and discouraging enough. It is the usual thieves—47,000 of them—who have done it. But even in these gloomy circumstances the faith of Samuel does not desert him. "We dare say," he says, drying his eyes, "it will all be overruled in some way for good." It would be hard to deny him that small piece of comfort for out-and-out Democrat as he is there is nothing else to cheer him up just now. Why does he not fill up the time by nominating Charles Francis Adams—say for Kelly's position?

THE WHISKEY RING CRUSADE. The N. Y. Tribune's St. Louis special regards the report as of the indictment of Gen Babcock and Orville Grant as sensational, and says:

The rumor involving Babcock and Orville Grant has been traced to the St Louis Times which printed a highly sensational article this morning that Secretary Bristow will finally succeed in indicting Orville Grant and the National Republican Executive Committee of 1872 as co-conspirators and receivers of the stolen funds, together with the possible impeachment of the President for guilty knowledge of these frauds, if not for a criminal participation in their proceeds. The Times has all along been friendly to the Whiskey Ring. The supposed object of this flaming article is to scare the friends of the Administration into fixing up some kind of a truce. It is almost certainly true that the distillers and gaugers were led to believe that a large amount of money was to go to Washington to help President Grant's election and up to within a short time past the Ring believed that the President would prevent the cases coming to trial to save himself.

The best informed, however, are convinced that President Grant was in no way mixed up in the matter, and that the money collected for him was appropriated by the conspirators. The President has been appealed to in the most earnest and pathetic manner by every influential man interested in the personal fortunes of the Ring, but has steadily and persistently refused to interfere. During his last visit to St. Louis, Gen McDonald, late supervisor, one of the President's best friends, sent up his card. Grant's reply, as learned from a responsible listener, was about this: "Tell Gen. McDonald that I cannot receive him. I have my impression that I cannot receive him. I have my impression that I cannot receive him. I have my impression

WHEN ROSES BLOW.

It was the time when roses blow,
The sweetest time in all the year,
When the sun was red and low,
And when the lilies were warm and clear
I met a maiden by the gate
In fairest white a fold of corn;
I saw her I was proud to wait,
For fairer girl was never born

I saw a blush upon each cheek,
A bashful gleam was in her eye
I fly earned to see her, hear her speak,
And when the day began to die
For love its secret long to hide
Beneath great leaves when day's no more
And when the flattering words have died,
It's true to tell to adore

We lingered long beside the gate,
And the sun's love was slowly told—
Until the happy hours grew late
And stars appeared like drops of gold
Hours odorous as sweet worth us to stay,
Paint nurse reached us from a rill,
We loved in the old fashion that the day
So long, so botanical, and still!

Nights to the time for love to spring
Begotten a blissful star in sky,
When every rapture seems to ring
With music and all wantonness by
The roses in us on gladly beat,
And we with parted brightness glow,
I envy no other time so sweet
For love, as that when roses blow!

PROFESSIONAL RAT CATCHER.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Times, October 26.]

We met in this city last evening Dick Lester the famous New York professional rat catcher, formerly proprietor of a rat pit on Water street, known as The Band Box, which was long since closed by Thompson by his assignee. They are at present at the Delavan House, Albany and proceed to work something in this manner. With their pockets shown upon the fact that they look at night they enter the kitchen or bakers' house, with a long pair of pincers and dark lantern in his hands and terrify with their cage. Advancing to the interior of the room (unless the door is shut) they stand for a moment within the light, a suspicion of a rat and the rats gather about him suddenly he jerks the slide from in front of the lantern's bulls eye and the glare falls in a circle upon the floor. The rats which may be within the circle stand astonished at the light, then with a rush run about within the light, appear still fearing to cross the darkness within it, it were a solid wall against which they have ventured. Dick then deliberately begins the work. Grasping by pincers his snakes a dip grabs a rat by the tail, the head the rat he appears to swallow tails at last drops it quickly into the cage, unseriously held open by one of the brothers, is seized until after a few of the rats retaining the swallowed
